

Global Tourism and Booking Behaviour: A Comprehensive Data Analysis

Dashboard:

Insights and Recommendations:

- Customers are spending similar amounts regardless of travel type, suggesting that pricing is fairly consistent across segments.
- Rather than increasing prices, the company may achieve better results by increasing booking volume and customer retention.
- Revenue is not dependent on a single country.
- This diversification reduces business risk because revenue is spread across multiple markets.
- A significant proportion of bookings are not being completed.
- Cancellation management should become a priority.
- Deposit requirements, Reminder notifications, Loyalty incentives, and Flexible rescheduling options can be considered to reduce the cancellation rate.
- Standard meal plans dominate and Buffet plans are much less frequently selected.

- Customers generally prefer simpler and more economical meal options.
- Resources should focus on optimizing standard meal offerings rather than expanding buffet services.
- Group + Cruise & Leisure + Cruise have the Highest ratings and Group + Car & Leisure + Car have Lower ratings.
- Transport choice has a stronger effect on satisfaction than travel type. Cruise experiences appear to provide the best customer experience.
- Promote cruise packages more aggressively and investigate why car-based trips receive lower ratings.
- The histogram is fairly spread out rather than concentrated around a single duration.
- Bookings Peak around 5–6 days, 9–10 days and 14 days
- Customers do not follow one standard vacation length. Offer multiple package durations instead of focusing only on short or long trips.

Conclusion:

The tourism business is performing consistently across markets, but future growth depends on three priorities:

- Reducing cancellations.
- Expanding high-rated travel experiences (especially cruises).
- Improving lower-rated services while tailoring packages to customer preferences.
